

Instrument Care

Disinfecting the instruments is the penultimate stage in the infection control process before final sterilisation

Decontamination and disinfection of all reusable instruments is an important and mandatory step that must be performed after each use, this reduces the risk of transferring infections between patients.

There is no way to prevent instruments from becoming contaminated with biological fluids such as blood and saliva during use.

Prior to sterilisation, professional level cleaning and disinfection is a vital step to ensuring complete compliance and peace of mind for both staff and patients alike.
