

Skin & Hands

Effective hand hygiene is vitally important to prevent the spread of pathogens between patients and staff

By far the easiest and most popular way to transmit pathogens between people is via the hands. This risk can easily be reduced with good hand hygiene and regular cleaning or disinfection.

High alcohol content and a short contact times are the key to high performance hand hygiene.

The addition of moisturisers like Aloe Vera and Vitamin E ensure hands are not only pathogen free but remain supple and fresh through out the day, even after repeated use.
