

Surface Care

Disinfection is essential for ensuring that surfaces do not transfer infectious pathogens to patients and staff

The probability of contamination of surfaces within the dental/medical environments is high so surface disinfection is particularly important in the fight against infection.

Due to patient traffic and the constant contact with contaminated objects, all equipment, surfaces, chairs, fixtures and fittings need to be disinfected between each treatment session.

Failure to comply with infection control guidelines can lead to outbreak of disease and increase the risk of spreading infections.
